“ George and Bernice were such good friends for many years. We watched their children grow up and my best memory of them was when Jamie, the youngest child and only girl, came to my kindergarten class, she loved it for about a week, then she didn't want to come any more.

George brought her to class and was horribly worried about Jamie not wanting to come to school, and said, " I just don't know what we are going to do?" So I reminded him of how he took Jamie every place with him, to the sale barn, hauling cattle, working cattle, and downtown to the stores, so she would just rather still go with him instead of going to kindergarten, and I didn't blame her, really, she probably learned just as much.

So I ask George to tell Bernice to just bring Jamie to school and plan to stay with her as long as she needed to until Jamie got comfortable in class. George brought Bernice and Jamie to kindergarten from then on and it worked perfectly. Bernice was also the best teacher assistant I ever had and Jamie loved kindergarten. I miss them both, what wonderful people, and such a loving caring couple who adored their children, George, Will, and Jamie.

Love,
