As a teenager, Maureen had a great sense of style. I remember her bell bottoms and beautiful tops with fancy sleeves. She had to put up with her pesky younger sisters who did not hesitate to “borrow” from her closet and then hang items back up at end of day. She always caught us though. But even though that must have been incredibly irritating, Maureen was always amazingly calm and loving, which is probably why we kept doing it! Seriously though, Maureen was so helpful to me and my other sisters during those awkward teenage years, even though she was just a teenager herself. We really looked up to her. I know she carried that quality throughout her adult life. She will be sorely missed. My deepest sympathies. Marian Tansey
